

Training, evaluation and intervention from an intersectional point of view: the case of the health field

The case of Madrid Health Autonomous Organization

The Madrid Health Autonomous Organization has promoted two actions with intersectional perspective in the field of health: on the one hand, a participatory diagnosis of the problems of LGBTQI people in sexual and reproductive health and, on the other hand, the design, also participatory, of a self-formative methodology aimed at municipal health professionals and social and community agents. The objective is to promote knowledge and awareness by facilitating tools for detecting and preventing discrimination in the field of health.
